A wide array of services are offered and metered via telecommunications networks, such as the Internet, using telephony-grade networks that involve computers with Internet access, such as personal computers, a laptop computer or personal digital assistant (PDA). In the United States, these include: Local telephone service, including long-distance telephone calls, wireless telephone calls and/or telefax calls; Call-back services, where the caller becomes informed of the cost of local calls charged to the telephone number called; Caller-ID and list services, which provide information about the caller (calling party) to the called party, such as the telephone number of the calling party. With Caller-ID, the called party may decide whether to accept the call or not. With list, information about the calling party may be provided to the called party; better way than to read this. “Precedence is a term that is used in many fields and often when we think of precedence, we think of all people having a special place in the order. In the order of an organisation, a precedence is a position that is given to a person for a specific task or set of tasks.” Robbins, Stephen P. Perilaku Organisasi 16. Stephen P. Robbins’s book explains that there are a number of different kinds of precedence in an organisation. The Preferences of the Leading Colleagues vs The Preferences of the Boss Robbins, Stephen P. Perilaku Organisasi 16. “It was found that these leaders at the peak exhibit several indicators.” Robbins explains that if the boss of the organisation is open to ideas, he will allow time for brainstorming. “He will give a chance to those who want to share their ideas.” The Preferences of the Colleagues “Their preference for change is also high.” “They are more open to using new information.” “They prefer to listen to the opinions of those below them.” “Leaders will also encourage subordinates to change and try new things.” “The preference of the leading colleagues is for improvement.” “They are open to reading and using new information.” “They are not afraid of making mistakes.” “They are actually more willing to make changes than the other leaders.” Rob ba244e880a
