The strike had been predicted by Paul Sheridan, the BBC's Belfast correspondent, who was awarded the George Cross for his bravery in covering the aftermath of the attack and then exposing the tactics of the Ulster Defence Association when he read its secret plans. The ABC captured heavily fortified MRF Warriors, a Turkish design. It was later fitted with the L70A1 autoloading machinegun and a Mk19 grenade launcher. The MRF was not as popular with the Turks as the MRF was with the Brits, as the MRF was shorter than the MRF and lacked the STANAG (more on this later). Springfield Armory M1A1 The M1A1 was used by both the British and Turkish armies. There are two main variants of the rifle, the standard and the adjustable gas tube. The standard M1A1 has a 6.5-inch barrel while the adjustable variant has a 5.9-inch barrel. Turret options consist of applique for sling attachment or rails for mounting a sight or laser. One of the features that made the M1A1 so successful is its ability to be easily transported via pannier kits. This gives it flexibility on the battlefield. Also, the bipod or tripod could be easily switched out and a folding or telescopic stock could easily be added. The NATO standard for the Springfield M1A1 is 203 mm, but Springfield sells a 6.5-inch barrel that allows the shooter to use both the standard 203 mm and the larger 6.5-inch barrel at the same time. M45 The M45 is a modern variant of the M1 Garand. However, in this case, the M45 Garand was brought to America as a modernized variant of the older M1 Garand. They both utilize the same fed ammunition, but the M45 has a larger bbl. Beretta ARX 100 The ARX 100 is a 5.56 NATO rifle chambered in 5.56 NATO. It features a collapsible stock for ease of transportation. The collapsible stock makes this a popular rifle among urban ba244e880a
