Characterization of peroxisomes in human hepatocarcinoma cells, HepG2: enhancement of catalase by sodium butyrate. HepG2 cells, a clone isolated from the human hepatocarcinoma cell line HepG2, which contain abundant peroxisomes, were treated with sodium butyrate, an agent known to induce peroxisomes in many other cell types. Sodium butyrate treatment led to more than a 5-fold increase in the number of peroxisomes observed by electron microscopy. The specific activities of catalase and urate oxidase in the peroxisomes from sodium butyrate-treated cells were increased approximately 2-fold as compared with those from untreated cells. The apparent Km values of catalase, the specific activity of which was increased, were lower than those for catalase in untreated cells. These results suggest that the activity of catalase is regulated by peroxisomal factors., org, and the server certificate in url: However, I still cannot get the files. A: I still
