The proposed work will focus on the formation of postsynaptic membrane complexes in the neuropil of the molluscan CNS. The

objective of this work is to determine if the peptidergic synaptic terminals of identified neurons and the membrane specializations of their postsynaptic targets correspond to well characterized structural and functional units of the nervous system. Previous work indicates that in some neuropil regions defined synaptic terminals form special membrane structures which are hypothesized to comprise a presynaptic recognition site. This hypothesis will be tested by quantifying the dimensions and organization of postsynaptic membrane specializations at identified peptidergic synapses. The results of this study should provide a foundation for future research into the mechanisms of synapse formation and assembly in the nervous system.

Synaptic contacts between identified target neurons will be reconstructed in serial sections using a stereological sampling method. The measurements will allow calculation of the size and relative abundance of postsynaptic membrane complexes at identified synapses. This information will be combined with data about the number of synaptic terminals on a given target neuron to determine if the numbers of synaptic terminals per unit length of target membrane are
