It was originally written as four separate books, the first two of which were published in 1945, one in Korea and the other in Japan. The first two books were then revised in 1950 and 1952 to form the single Chronicle. A key work in Korean literature, the novel recounts the last decade of the Joseon Dynasty and the fall of the southern Kingdom of Korea to the Japanese invader Hideyoshi in 1592. It covers the beginning of the rule

The binding of monoclonal antibodies to class II major histocompatibility complex (MHC) molecules to the surfaces of T cells was examined. Antibodies to monomorphic determinants of the heavy chain of human HLA-DR molecules (DRh) bound to T cells but antibodies to monomorphic determinants of the alpha and beta chains of the mouse I-A molecules did not. The binding of anti-DRh was restricted to T cells of the DR-positive class II phenotype. With this monoclonal antibody, binding to resting T cells could be detected in the absence of exogenous antigenic peptide. A
