The role of the lysosome in targeting the epithelial sodium channel to the surface of the rabbit corneal endothelium. The goal of the present study was to evaluate the role of the lysosome in targeting the epithelial sodium channel (ENaC) to the cell surface. Rabbit corneal endothelia were incubated with antibodies to alphaENaC that were conjugated to the lysosome-associated membrane protein, and a homologous conjugate of a control antibody to alkaline phosphatase. The distribution and function of the channels were assessed by immunofluorescence and patch-clamp techniques. The antibodies to alphaENaC and the control conjugate were taken up by the cells. Antibodies to alphaENaC significantly reduced ENaC activity and electrophysiological responses. Specificity of these effects was demonstrated by the loss of ENaC activity after incubation with a homologous conjugate to alkaline phosphatase. These results support a direct role for the lysosome in directing alphaENaC to the plasma membrane of corneal endothelia. This mechanism may be important for the maintenance of fluid permeability and the regulation of fluid flow in the cornea. On August 24, 2018, the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) notified the FBI by letter, pursuant to the Mandatory Access to Data Act (P.L. 99-508), that "two Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) employees that participated in, or otherwise handled, the investigation of President Donald J. Trump's former National Security Advisor, Michael T. Flynn, knowingly and willfully violated federal criminal laws, and as such were subject to prosecution." The OIG also stated: "In this matter, the FBI took immediate, appropriate corrective actions regarding the violations and we are closing the investigation." In response to the OIG ♦ 3e33713323
