Come election day, your email address will be used to send you necessary updates on how and when to vote - including information on your voting location and which politicians are running for which constituency - and the date of the election. But experts say the process is at risk of being abused by political parties. Now, a firm is to set up a system, that will alert elected representatives when their email is being intercepted and anonymously passed on to the person being spied on. Matt Hancock, the Health Secretary, said: "People need to feel confident in sharing personal or sensitive information over email. "The Internet has made it possible for us to share our views and express our opinions at a scale and speed not seen before.Q:
