Without altering the repository, navigate to GLeDitor\src\engine\Main.cpp. At line #185, you should find: 183 bool JIT_ShouldCompile() { 184 return true; 185 } comment out (remove the semicolon) the call to this function, and build GLeDitor. With Compiler_Hook.Tao, you can use either of: build with -DJIT=false to tell the compiler it shouldn't bother compiling build with -DJIT=null to have the compiler assume that it's going to use the previous JIT (within 48 hours) build with a different JIT_ShouldCompile() function, which would need to make different assumptions as to whether it will be called or not I think this is the most foolproof method so far, as it is easy to customize the JIT_ShouldCompile() function to provide the level of runtime performance desired (not to mention you can easily disable the JIT for testing). I hope it works out ok for you. Hi GentleGeek, thank you for the report. I did try to compile it myself, and indeed it did not work out. I didn't think it would be possible to disable the JIT

To investigate the mechanism of incorporation of synovial cells into articular cartilage, bovine cartilage explants were cultured in MEM containing 10% newborn calf serum or 20% fetal calf serum. Incorporation of synovial cells into the explants was evaluated morphologically by staining with 0.1% toluidine blue. For the visualization of proteoglycan degradation, the explants were labeled with 35S-sulfate. Whole tissue 35S-sulfate release was calculated. When the serum concentration was reduced from 20 to 10% fetal calf serum, incorporation of synovial cells was reduced from 21.8% in explants cultured in 20% fetal calf serum to 8.1% in explants cultured in 10% fetal calf serum. Whole tissue 35S-sulfate release was reduced from 8.0 to 4.8% of the total 35S-sulfate content. Similar results were obtained by incubating cartilage explants with 10 and 50 ng/ml of IL-1. The results suggest that a low concentration of fetal calf serum in the culture medium enhances incorporation of synovial cells into cartilage. The reduction in synovial incorporation is associated with reduced IL-1 production and enhanced proteoglycan degradation.Neural correlates of cognitive conflict in women and men: a 2x2 repeated measures fMRI study.
