A: You can create a controller action with an argument type that supports content-negotiation (i.e. one that implements the IEnumerable interface). The action should then take an instance of the selected property of the type from the IEnumerable and return the View() with that selected value. public class MyController : Controller { // ^^ The ActionParameter public ActionResult Action(string id) { // Here you have the choice between a sting or an IEnumerable // Here we'll use the first item in the enumerable. Impact of an educational campaign with a cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) simulation before the first nursing course for newly hired nursing faculty. To determine whether a non-faculty member educational intervention on CPR, which included a simulation, can positively impact nursing students' knowledge and attitudes about CPR before the first nursing course. A pre-post intervention design was used for one class (100 students) at a midwestern, public university. Both groups of students in a baccalaureate nursing course were given a baseline survey about student attitudes and knowledge about CPR at the first day of class. The experimental group received a 20-minute CPR simulation that included short video, demonstration, and self-assessment of skill level. Students in both groups were given post-intervention surveys that measured knowledge and attitudes about CPR. Students in the experimental group showed an overall significant improvement in CPR knowledge, whereas there was a decrease in student familiarity with CPR in the control group. There was no change in student attitudes about CPR over time. There was no control group in the baseline survey. The high-fidelity simulation had a positive impact in improving nursing students' knowledge and attitudes about CPR, but more research in this field is needed. I'm not a North Korean, but I want to be careful in case they're trying to take advantage of me. I didn't have any money with me, but I found an ATM in the mall and used my credit card, and then lost my ATM card. However, I don't have my ATM card, and it seems like ATMs only work for ATM card holders. I'm afraid that if I tell them I don't have any money, they may take advantage of me. Are there ATMs where I can withdraw money without an ID? A: There's nowhere in North Korea where you can withdraw money without a North Korean ID - including ATMs. It isn't common practice to have foreign IDs in North Korea, though lots of people would like to. So if the people asking you for money are really foreign, and if you think they're fakes, the best option is to ask them for a phone number or a location that you can call them from. On the other hand, that means potentially opening yourself up
