The whole iText project is licensed under the General Public License Version 2.0. You can, of course, use iText to create sourcecode for projects of your own, but you have to ask yourself if it is useful enough to publish in a public domain. By purchasing a commercial iText license, you acknowledge and state that you made an informed decision. It is free to use the proprietary iText library. You can use iText under the GPL, as long as you make your documentation and sourcecode available. iText for Java 1.0 is a GPLed library. There are some advantages to use a non-free Java library like iText. Most JEE libraries are closed source and don't have a GPL license. The few open source Java PDF libraries were not very advanced and I had to duplicate a lot of functionality. iText for Java is a big change from previous Java PDF libraries. For example, it has a multi-threading engine to convert PDFs from the commandline and the GUI. You can also manually start converting PDFs and not only from external applications. All iText for Java programs support the current PDF specification.
