Going to the Polls Politics and elections have been a part of the human experience for as long as our ancestors came together to gather and share information. Primitive tribes or clans held meetings for the purpose of making decisions about governing themselves. We know that almost every culture and civilization has held elections, including the Greeks.

Vocational Training Program Overview The Department of Community and Public Affairs offers a career training program where students can earn a Certificate in Administrative Services, Certificate in Public Management, Certificate in Organizational Management, or Certificate in Public Law. The program can be tailored to meet specific needs of individual students. There are no fees for the coursework. The Program As part of their coursework, students may take a part-time internship in one of the categories of job classification they are training to do. If students cannot obtain an internship or if they want to take a summer internship, they can participate in a paid summer internship that is part of their degree. Students work with a trained career counselor to decide on the career pathway based on their interests, skills, and goals, and which courses to take. The student earns one semester credit for each course they complete. The training program is offered both on campus and through distance education. The required courses are: Course Information Course: Hours: Academic Level: Course Outline: Academic Calendars Fall 2018: January 11 - February 4. February 5 - April 1. Spring 2019: May 1 - August 4. Endoscopic retrograde pancreatography: a method for the direct visualization of pancreatic ducts. The endoscopic retrograde pancreatography (ERP) method, in which contrast material is injected into the pancreatic duct, was evaluated in 25 patients with clinical problems resulting from pancreatic disease. The pancreatography was performed under fluoroscopic control with a diagnostic fiberoptic duodenoscope. Immediately after the procedure, a pancreatogram of the pancreatic ducts was obtained without the need to cross the papilla. In 24 out of the 25 patients with pancreas divisum, the pancreatic ducts were connected. In three cases, the papilla was not visualized. Two cases of the pancreatic head were found to have marked edema of the main pancreatic ducts, and a contrast injection was injected proximal to the marked portion of the ducts. In a third patient, the ampullary orifice of the distal pancreatic duct was found to be too small to inject the contrast material. The technique of ERP is very useful for examining pancreatic ducts, although the success rate is very high. Tools Classical music superstar Christophe Rousset (Madame Butterfly, The Flying Dutchman) is back with an often-humorous, often-moving world premiere opera about the painter Francis Bacon (1909-1992) and his "will," which, appropriately, is also opera in its own right. It's full of comic relief, as Rousset and librettist, Edouard Gozlan, create a portrait of Francis as the art world's most controversial and enduring enigma. Gozlan and Rousset, who also wrote the Picasso opera for Lyon's famous Châtelet, set the opera in Paris in the summer of 1989. Bacon is signed to an exclusive contract with a gallery in London. And there, he's having an affair with a silent partner, Hilary Llewelyn-Davies. It's a scandal in the art world, and one that plays out in increasingly difficult and dramatic circumstances. It's the story of the painter Francis Bacon, one of the most influential 20th century artists. How did he go from splashing paint on canvas to becoming a dissolute, drug-addled, alcoholic, pill-popping, gay-bashing, child-molesting rap artist who wrote a "will" that took over an industry and lives on in controversy to this
